pends Success of Breeder-Must Have Some Attention.

By all means keep your ewes healthy and vigorous, for upon a healthy, thrifty condition of ewes depends your success. The healthy ewe is able to live on rougher forage than your other farm stock, but it is with sheep as with all else. You must give them some attention if you expect profit. Men, who every season make money from their lambs, find that if they feed them better for several weeks and flush the ewe stock each fall, that is, before going to the buck, there are more twins and more milk at lambing 100 time. Many of the troubles with weak lambs and empty udders would be avoided if your ewes were fatter when brought in for the winter.

Try the plan of flushing your ewes, then follow with good pasture and you will see from results that the plan makes most profits. Have a dry, wellsheltered roomy yard, with deep shed accomplish his purpose.—Printers' Ink. with dogs, have a tight, stout woven for the ewes. SHOULD NOT NEGLECT COLT

If Youngster is Properly Handled From Beginning It Will Not Give Much Trouble.

The farmer owning 40 acres or more of land, who does not raise at least one colt every year, is not doing his best. The mare will do most kinds of farm work and raise her colt without much loss of time. If the colt is properly handled from the beginning it will not give much trouble. Never allow it to run after its mother when she is working. This worries and frets the mare, and it wears out the colt. Keep it at the barn, loose in a box stall, and tempt it with a little clover hay and oats. Early colts will be weaned prety soon now. If they have been brought up to this point right, weaning does not mean much. Feed more requently with sweet clover hay, oats and corn, and the colt will soon be able to take care of itself. Keep it in the barn at night and allow it to run with other young stock in the pasture during the day.

Feeding Hogs.

It is best never to feed hogs on the ground. It is no more natural for a hog to pick his feed up out of the dirt and mud than for any other animal to do so, although circumstances have in many cases forced him to do so. Have floors on which to feed hogs, and not only will you save feed by using them, but they will appreciate their rations much more.

Susceptibility to Disease. Sheep, while generaly hardy and robust, are extremely susceptible to attacks of disease, which, although not always fatal, wear on the constitution and ultimately impair the usefulness of animals afflicted.

HOUSE FOR THE FARM FLOCK

Material Used Does Not Figure as Much in Economy as Snape Allowing Use of All Room.

It is not so much the materials that enter into the construction of a poultry house that means economy as it is the style or shape that allows for making use of every inch of room. from time to time as the flock is increased, writes Thomas F. Maher of New York in the Farm and Home. The roosting room is placed in the central part of the house and the roosts are in such a position that no drafts can possibly reach the hens. The ventilator, with openings close to the floor, tends to draw the fresh air from the windows toward the roosts and carries impure air out, while an abundance of fresh air is around the
